

My Sixth Grade Odyssey

By: Wyatt Phillips

O great muse Stephan Hawking, guide my hand to tell of The Great Sir William IV of Sixth Gradia,

Who led the Huns to victory, and won the battle of Collin's stomach black-hole.

The first day of his quest to save and improve the lives of the Sixth Gradians, the rockets began to prepare their volley.

Ready to launch, Jalen of Troy was standing in the center of the attackers' aim.

The rockets launched, and as Sir William saw where they were headed, he dashed to the battle field and shoved Jalen of Troy out of the way, saving him from the bombardment.

The next day of his quest to save and improve the lives of the Sixth Gradians, Aiden von Grayheign came to school having hatched a new scheme.

He enticed Sir William's friends with promises of money and power, in exchange for their souls.

Sir William resisted the urge to give up his soul, and showed his class that Aiden's Promises rang hollow.

Aiden von Grayheign was arrested, meanwhile escaping with some of the victim's souls.

The next day of Sir William's quest to save and improve the lives of the Sixth Gradians brought the Battle of the warring states of China.

He saw that his kingdom was in a vulnerable position and slunk back into the desert, waiting for the perfect opportunity.

Sir William took control of the Hun, and struck, and struck, until he and his armies had devastated the evil states of China.

On the final day of his quest to save and improve the lives of the Sixth Gradians, Sir William fought to defeat the black hole of Collin's stomach.

At first, before the famine, the harvests of Sixth Gradia were numerous and fruitful.

Then, the vicious black hole in Collin's stomach attacked and consumed the crops of the Goldfish farms and the Twinkie plantations.

Sir William emerged and led the people of Sixth Gradia into battle:

They closed the black hole with Mr. Mac's Marvelous Black Hole Sealant™, and food was once again plentiful.

And so, having defeated the threats to, and saved the lives of his fellow classmates, Sir William was hailed as the hero of Sixth Gradia.
